WILL COUNTY TREAS. IN STATE OFFICE RACE

Numerous people of various organizations thruout the State have been wondering whether or not Conrad J. Wirth is still in the race for State Treasurer. Mr. Wirth at the present time is County Treasurer of Will County, living in Joliet. He was born in Springfield, Illinois in 1901 and was married in 1926 and has two children. Mr. Wirth came north as an engineer in the State Highway Department in 1922. In 1934 he was elected County Treasurer of Will County, residing in said County for only eight years.

Just recently in Chicago, at a meeting of the Executive Committee of the County Treasurer's Association tion of Illinois, Mr. Wirth was elected President of the Association for the fourth consecutive term, a position that has never been held by any one over one year.

Conrad J. Wirth

Last May in Milwaukee at a Convention of National County Officers, the County Treasurer was elected Secretary and Treasurer of the Organization. In 1936 he ran for Delegate to the National Convention carrying his district, the 11th Congressional district, by an overwhelming majority. At that time he also handled the Spring Primary Election for Governor Horner and his ticket in Will County. He carried the County for the Governor and his ticket better than two to one.

His record as County Treasurer in Will County has been an outstanding record for efficiency and honesty and all merchants and public officials are 100 percent behind him, as he has been receiving letters and requests every day to stay in the race that he is the logical man for the position.

What Has Become of Mokena Rink?

Several months ago a movement was started in Mokena to secure a WPA recreational project and at first much interest was aroused in it. A piece of land was leased from the Rock Island railroad and an excavation was made for an ice skating rink, but that is as far as the project has gone to date.

The people of Mokena are beginning to ask if the project is dropped or what has become of it?

In the meantime, the young people of Mokena who are interested in ice skating have to go to Frankfort where the village has established a fine skating pond which is being extra well patronized by the young folks from, not only Frankfort, but the surrounding territory.

Will Mokena have an ice skating rink or not, is the question which many would like to have answered.

Hold Truck Driver In Fatal Auto Accident

On the early morning of October 11, 1937, three men were killed when their auto crashed into a truck at junction of Southwest highway and Wolf Road near the Chas. Liess Filling Station and Tuesday of this week a Will County coroner's jury held a Chicago truck driver responsible for the accident.

The three men killed were from Will County. Henry Zeisner, 47 of Lockport and Albert Wills, 40 of DuPage crossing were killed instantly, while Matthew Mulcahy of Channahon was fatally injured.

Mulcahy, Zeisner and Wills were riding in an auto which collided at a highway intersection with a Material Cartage and Supply Co., truck driven by John F. Wynne, 1641 Fullerton Ave., Chicago, who was not seriously injured.

Wynne had been subpoenaed by Dr. Lonus B. Brannon, coroner, as a witness at Tuesday's inquest which was held in the Young Bldg., in Joliet, but he did not appear.

A state highway patrolman, Wilbur Kennedy, was the principal witness.

"From evidence offered by Mr. Kennedy," the jurors wrote in their verdict, "we find that John F. Wynne was directly responsible for the accident. He did not drive with the proper care and caution, and he became confused and turned into the wrong traffic lane, causing the collision."

The jurors also held the cartage company responsible.

WHITE STORE IN JOLIET QUITTING BUSINESS AFTER TWENTY YEARS OF SERVICE

It was with a great surprise and deep regret that the thousands of customers of Will County's popular department store, known thruout Will and adjoining counties as, "The White Store," Joliet, learned is going out of business after twenty years of service to the community. The name of J. J. Cohen, genial owner and manager, of "The White Store" has been a household word thruout all this section for years.

Along in 1918, Mr. Cohen first opened his "White Store" in a room 14 x 20 feet on Cass street. Thru his courteous and fair dealings coupled with quality merchandise and persistent advertising, Mr. Cohen drew a big trade from many miles around. In a brief time he enlarged his quarters, then added a grocery department and finally absorbed stores to the right and left of his own store until he had secured all the available space and still his establishment continued to expand. Then along in 1930 Dr. J. J. Coady, former Mokena physician and now located in Minooka, Ill., purchased the property to the east of the Ottawa Street M. E. Church and began the erection of a modern department store building and Mr. Cohen took a ten year lease on this building and moved his steadily growing store into the new quarters.

So much for the business side of this enterprise. Business meant more than dollars and cents to Mr. Cohen for he valued the friendship of his customers more than anything else and he was always found to have a pleasant word for anyone who entered his store. Mr. Cohen often said that his friends built his store. His trade came chiefly from among the laboring people, farmers and railroad men and Mr. Cohen understood and could speak the language of the common man. He did inestimable good for his city and community. He was always to be found in the forefront of civic and community interests. He also had a warm heart for the ex-service man and every Armistice Day he handed out some special gifts to the boys who all held Mr. Cohen in high regard.

With the closing of this popular store fully 80 persons will be looking for other jobs. Mr. Cohen always stood ready to give needy persons employment wherever possible.

For many years Mr. Cohen bought up stocks of various stores and just recently he completed his 100th stock purchase. In all these transactions he passed on the savings to his customers.

For 19 years Mr. Cohen was a consistent and persistent advertiser in this paper and the advs., of The White Store invariably appeared every week year in and out until the name of "The White Store" was a household word thruout this section.

The many friends of Mr. Cohen wish him much success in whatever enterprise he may engage. For the next several months he plans to take a vacation following which he will take up some other business pursuit.

CHAPTER IX

-10-

Helm Blackadder was already closeted with the ambassador who opened the interview by handing over a resume, written in his own hand, of the situation to date.

"There you are, Mr. Blackadder, and I don't mind saying Miss Sewell's escapade has managed to put the United States government, as represented by my unfortunate self, in a nasty hole. You asked us for assistance; I now return the compliment by calling upon you to help me out."

"How?" asked Blackadder.

"That's the very question I was going to put to you," he said. "You have all the facts. What do you suggest?"

"Find me a car and a man who knows the way to La Barranca. Once I get in there I'll guarantee to bring the girl out."

"On what grounds do you intend to base your action?"

"She's a minor and authority has been delegated to me by her legal guardian," said Blackadder as though he were reciting a lesson.

"You're sure she's under age?" interpolated the ambassador anxiously.

"You probably know the laws of the state of New York better than I do. A girl becomes of age at eighteen for certain purposes and at twenty-one for others. I'm willing to risk an assumption."

"Good enough," said the ambassador with a nod. "I can't offer you an embassy car, but I'll have the town searched at once for a good one owned by somebody well acquainted with the roads and the location of the hacienda. When could you start?"

"At dawn tomorrow," said Blackadder. "I'd go tonight but I doubt if we'd gain much time and it won't do me any harm to get some sleep."

He named his hotel and left the embassy at the exact moment Arnaldo, half across the city, was being shown into the private study of the minister of war.

"Adan, my friend!" exclaimed the minister, holding out both hands.

Arnaldo dodged, the embrace but grinned, showing a gleam of white teeth. "How much is it going to cost me?" he asked. "From the welcome I'll bet it runs into thousands."

"You've guessed it," said the minister, "but the wrong way round. Thousands for you."

"I can't believe it! Spread the map."

"Sit down and I will. It's a matter of buying off a young girl at anything up to $50,000. You might talk her into signing for 30, 20, or 10. With your tongue and looks you might get her to do it for nothing. However you manage it the balance is yours, and no questions asked."

Adan turned his head in a peculiar gesture of alertness. "Who's the girl? What's her name?"

"She's a young American, Mees Joize Sewell."

Arnaldo threw out his hands and rose. "You're too late—too late by a lot of hours."

"Why? What do you know about it?"

"She went to La Barranca a couple of days ago. How long would it take Dorado to cook her goose? Figure it out for yourself."

"Dorado!" gasped the minister, stifling a laugh. "Apparently you haven't read this morning's papers. He thrust forward the same newspaper clipping he had shown the ambassador. 'Cast your eye over that.'"

Arnaldo read the single paragraph, his expression changing at almost every line. When he reached the end he burst into a roar of laughter. "Pepe, of all people! Pepe!"

"You think it's funny?" said the minister.

"Funny? It's so funny I'm going to have sore ribs for the rest of my life." He folded the clipping and put it in his wallet. "And Margarida Fonseca told me the girl had gone to plead with him—to throw herself on his mercy!"

"Margarida Fonseca!" cried the minister, suddenly going tense and leaning forward.

"Sure, and what of it?"

The minister sank back. "The plot gets thicker," he explained, "and when I say plot I mean plot. But I begin to see the light and by it the finger of Onelia. The time has come for you to declare yourself. Which are you for—him or me?"

"You," said Adan promptly.

"Now tell me what it's all about."

After ten minutes' talk the minister picked up a signed slip of paper and read its contents aloud: "As minister of war and with the consent of my government I guarantee the payment of an amount not to exceed $50,000 in case the senorita Joyce Sewell, daughter and heir of Cutler Sewell, signs a quitclaim to the property known as La Barranca and leaves the republic of Mexico within two weeks of the date hereof." He passed it to Arnaldo and asked with pardonable pride,

"You notice the simple wording? Whoever brings in the quitclaim together with this order gets the money."

"Provided the girl has left Mexico."

"Yes, yes; of course. We don't care to have the job of expelling her, but once she's across the border we'll undertake to see she doesn't come back. What about it, Adan? Doesn't it look like easy money?"

"On the face of it," said Arnaldo slowly, "it does—too easy. Where's the catch?"

"For a man like you and with your resources," said the minister, "there's no catch whatever. There can't be. What's your answer? Will you take it on or not?"

Adan stood staring at the paper in his hand without seeing it. "I'll go," he declared finally.

They shook hands and he started out but before he reached the door the telephone rang with such insistency he paused. A moment later the minister was holding up his hand, ordering him to wait. The conversation began with "Yes, Excellency," and ended with the same phrase. He relinquished the apparatus and sat back.

"I See," Said Blackadder, Frowning Thoughtfully.

"Well, Adan, you have a rival. The ambassador is sending his own emissary, a compatriot with the strange name of Blackadder."

"Good," said Adan. "Blackadder—it sounds like a snake. Then that let's me out."

"On the contrary; it doubles the importance of your mission. My thinking of you was a stroke of genius, because the more gringos get mixed in this business the worse it is for us. Besides, I feel the ambassador's choice hasn't a chance of success."

"By the way," Arnaldo said suddenly, "what do I get out of it?"

"I told you!" gasped the minister.

"Isn't fifty thousand enough?"

"That's for the girl," said Arnaldo coolly. "If I lick Onelia, save your neck, attend to Dorado and keep a couple of countries out of war it's going to cost you fifty thousand more. Is it agreed?"

"I suppose so," said the minister after a long pause. "Do you want me to put it in writing?"

"Why should you?" asked Arnaldo with a thin gleam of shining teeth. "Once I've heard it you and I know your word is as good as your bond—once I've heard it."

He departed.

Arnaldo knew when to rush to a job and when to take it easy. He got away around seven in the morning, curled up in the back seat and disposed himself for slumber. Juanito, his daredevil driver, knew little of speed under 60 miles an hour, consequently Adan's nap ended violently a little after eight o'clock. For a moment he thought it was an earthquake, then realized it was merely the difference between the road before and after Toluca. He climbed into the front seat and presently was dangling from the overhead struts as Joyce had done.

As they rounded a low butte the white blot of La Barranca burst into view, yet neither of them saw it. Instinctively Juanito slowed even before Adan could tap his wrist. Directly before them, possibly a little over halfway to the distant hacienda, a troop of horsemen was swirling in contracting circles around a slowly moving car.

"Back up," ordered Arnaldo, "and hide her. Stick her nose against the hill."

Juanito obeyed. A moment later they were climbing the mound which was crowned by a growth of three kinds of cacti, one of them a towering and many-branched sample of the giant torch variety. The horsemen, having brought the car to a halt, had gathered in a group ahead of it. Now a thick-set man stepped out of its tonneau and walked directly toward them. Scarcely had he left the car than its driver raced it backward into a Y turn, reversed his gears and presently was shooting at top speed across the plain with his recent employer in a direct line between him and the bandits.

"For once a coward saves his master's life," murmured Arnaldo. "I don't get it," said Juanito.

"The man you see down yonder is a gringo named Blackadder. Dorado and his men would have filled him full of holes if his louse of a driver hadn't created a diversion."

"Dorado!" breathed Juanito in an awed whisper.

Blackadder was scarcely conscious of his driver's treachery, so absorbed was his attention by the gaping muzzles of two double-action forty-fives and the man who held them. Experience in many tough spots of the world, notably mining camps and the diamond fields of Lencoes, had taught him a gun at the level of the hip invariably means business. Besides, Dorado's pear-shaped face presented such a vivid incarnation of brutality as to arouse doubt as to whether the six-shooters might not in the long run turn out to be angels of mercy. Instinctively Helm raised both hands and kept them high. Without appearing to move a muscle Dorado sent a searing bullet between the spread fingers of one of them.

"Put 'em down," he ordered in guttural English, then murmured instructions to two of his followers.

They dismounted, frisked Blackadder for arms, seized him by feet and wrists, swung him into the saddle of one of their horses, and trussed his ankles beneath its barrel so tightly he winced at the pain. He started to protest in Spanish but caught his tongue in time. Both men mounted the remaining riderless horse and the cavalcade was off. Dorado rode at its head at a mile-eating hand gallop and the rest followed, closely bunched around the prisoner.

The barranca was narrowing steadily. Three abandoned drifts gaped in the walls of the chasm, two on the southern, one on the northern side, and along the stream for a distance of a hundred yards men could be seen busily sloshing wooden bateas for placer gold. With a muttered order Dorado dismounted and passed into the recesses of the largest of the cave-like openings. In a moment every rider had unsaddled and the freed horses were driven helter-skelter upstream into a cliff-locked corral.

The nearest man to Blackadder drew his sheath knife and slashed the taut thong connecting his ankles. Either by accident or on purpose the knife severed the girth and gashed the pony's hide as well. The horse leaped in air, hurling rider and saddle to the ground. There was a roar of laughter. Finding himself unable to rise Blackadder started to crawl on hands and knees to the brook, intending to bathe his lacerated and half-paralyzed legs in the cooling water.

At each slish of the icy water his fury rose, restoring his courage and determination to more than their normal level. Leaping far over he extracted passport and wallet from his breast pocket and managed to thrust them under a flat stone. Presently Dorado called to him—not loudly, but the funnel of the drift acted like a megaphone.

"Come here, cabron."

Blackadder found he could barely walk. He approached, entered and at a gesture from Dorado sank on a truss of hay with his back against the wall. Instantly his long training as a miner set his senses alert. He deduced the fact that there must be a shaft, small or large, somewhere in the rear of the cava. Blackadder's nostrils informed him such was the case, not by reason of any odor but because of an indescribable thinness in the air. Dorado straddled a camp stool.

"You spik Castellano?" he asked.

"No," lied Blackadder.

"What is your name?"

"Henry Gilfalcon."

"Henrique, hein? You gringo—Americano?"

"No, I'm British," said Blackadder, but instantly regretted the falsehood, for at the sudden hardening of Dorado's luminous eyes he realized it had not gone over.

"I think perhaps you lie," said Dorado softly. "When I know you lie I send a finger to the American ambassador—one finger each week. How much money you got?"

"I did lie," said Blackadder, "and I'm sorry. I'm an American, but all my money—everything I had in the world—was in my dispatch case in that car."

"No money, eh? Perhaps pretty soon somebody want to buy you for 25,000 pesos. Better write letter while you have enough fingers. You write letter any time you like; I read it. You say send money to General Dorado, Mexico City."

"I see," said Blackadder, frowning thoughtfully.

Something was stirring in his brain—a seed, an acorn that developed in a flash to the size of a full-grown oak. Roughly it could be framed in a single question. Why not substitute La Barranca for the ransom of 25,000 pesos and thus kill four birds with one stone?

In spite of exhaustion he could not sleep, tortured by the aching of his swollen ankles, but toward dawn fell into a doze. It proved a misfortune, since by the time he was roused Dorado and his riders had already departed on their daily foray, but the guards remained. The day proved unlucky for Dorado as well. At nightfall, wafted along within a blue cloud of blasphemy, he was carried in on an improvised litter and laid on his cot; the bullet that had pierced his thigh had killed his horse.

CHAPTER X

Arnaldo had stayed crouched beside the trunk of the cactus much longer than ordinary caution required, thinking and thinking hard. A full hour elapsed before he led the way back to the car and ordered Juanito to proceed.

Juanito never missed a chance to make speed and as the trail frequently forked this way and that, dodging the mudholes of the recent rainy season, he was forced to come to some quick decisions. Such a choice now presented itself. The fork to the left was undoubtedly the main road but the wheel marks to the right seemed fresher. He chose the former, yielding instinctively to the pull of memory, for he had driven this way once before. Recollection told him there would be a short bridge, relic of more prosperous times. But there was no bridge; it had been carried away in the last floods. He jammed down both feet, reached for the emergency brake and brought the car to a halt on the very lip of an arroyo fully 12 feet deep and twice as wide.

"Numskull!" growled Arnaldo.

"Jump, imbecil!"

Slowly the car was nosing down and but for the emergency brake would have glided forward and then rushed. Arnaldo on one side and Juanito on the other scrambled up the bank just in time to cross a steadily widening fissure. The push of their feet was the last straw; a great block of earth gave way with a dull rumble. The car made a nose dive, bounced and fell on its back, its four wheels in air.

South Africans Taught U. S. New Game Called "Rabbits"; Twelve Men in Team

Some years ago a number of South African boys came to this country to stage a play representing the English-Boer war, notes a writer in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. They played for hours at a time an active outdoor game called "Rabbits"—the favorite game of South Africa.

The field on which the game is played is 120 feet long and 24 feet wide. It is divided by six cross lines, each 24 feet apart.

There are two teams of about 12 each—the hunters and the rabbits. The hunters take their places on the crosslines of the field, two on each line. They can move up and down this line as they please, but a hunter must keep one foot on the line all the time.

The rabbits are assembled at one end of the field, and at a signal they run or walk through to the other end without letting any one of the hunters touch them. As they pass through, the hunters try to tap them. If a rabbit is tapped he is dead and must leave the field until the next play. For each rabbit who passes safely through the field, the rabbits get one point.

If a rabbit passes beyond the side-lines, he is counted dead. Likewise if a hunter has both feet off the lines when he taps a rabbit, he is out for the rest of the play.

At the end of three or five minutes a whistle is blown and the first play ends. Then the hunters change their places with the rabbits and the game begins again.

If there are too many hunters, some should act as policemen to see that there are no fouls committed and that the rabbits pass through the entire field. Twelve on each side is a good number to play the game, but more or less can play by changing the number of cross lines.

Montenegro Lost Independence

Although one of the principal objects of the Allies in the World war was to protect the rights of small nations, little Montenegro, which fought so valiantly with the victors, lost its independence.—Collier's Weekly.

HOW to SEW

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

IF YOU want to make a very big doll, use two hanks of yarn and the biggest red bandanna handkerchief you can find. Smaller dolls made from one hank and a medium size handkerchief are also attractive.

Tie the hank at the top as at A, then cut it across the bottom. Make the head by tying the yarn in as at B, then separate part of the strands at the sides and bind them together to make the arms as at C and D. Cut these strands off as at E to make the hands. Bind the rest of the yarn around as at F to define the waistline. Thread a large needle with white darning cotton and make the mouth and eyes with several stitches made as shown here. Sew small black buttons or beads in the middle of the eyes.

Cut a square out of the center of the handkerchief. The square piece you cut out should be big enough so it may be cut through the center from corner to corner to make two triangles—one to be used for the head kerchief for the doll and one for the three cornered shoulder kerchief. When this is done, gather around the square hole in the center of the bandanna and draw up the gathering thread to make the full top of the skirt. Every Homemaker should have a copy of Mrs. Spears' new book, SEWING. Forty-eight pages of step-by-step directions for making slipcovers and dressing tables; restoring and upholstering chairs, couches; making curtains for every type of room and purpose. Making lampshades, rugs, ottomans and other useful articles for the home. Readers wishing a copy should send name and address, enclosing 25 cents, to Mrs. Spears, 210 South Desplains St., Chicago, Illinois.

A Fair Warning

A STORY is told of an old colored woman sitting on the steps of a church during a Woman's Rights meeting in Akron, Ohio, in 1851. She listened to the fiery speeches by the men for quite awhile, denouncing the idea that women should vote. Finally the old woman walked to the front of the church, pointed her finger at the men and said, "If de fust woman God ever made turned dis world upside down all by herself, dese women all togeder can set it right side up again and you men better let 'em do it."

Are Women Better Shoppers than Men?

GRANTING a woman's reputation for wise buying, let's trace the methods by which she has earned it. Where does she find out about the advantages and details of electrical refrigeration? What tells her how to keep the whole household clean—rugs, floors, bathroom tiling—and have energy left over for golf and parties? How does she learn about new and delicious entrees and desserts that surprise and delight her family? Where does she discover those subtleties of dress and make-up that a man appreciates but never understands?

Why, she reads the advertisements. She is a consistent, thoughtful reader of advertisements, because she has found that she can believe them—and profit thereby. Overlooking the advertisements would be depriving herself of data continuously useful in her job of Purchasing Agent to the Family.

For that matter, watch a wise man buy a car or a suit or an insurance policy. Not a bad shopper himself! He reads advertisements, too!

Airplane Show

Opens In Chicago

The first airplanes are being installed in the International Amphitheatre in Chicago this week for the International Air Show, America's greatest aviation exposition which will be held from January 28 to February 6.

In all, some 75 airplanes will be assembled under the roof of the vast amphitheatre and all but the largest planes will be landed on a special landing strip immediately adjoining it.

The Chicago Aid Show is the official 1938 exposition of America's leading airplane manufacturers. All the new models will be shown. In addition, the Army and Navy and other government departments are presenting exhibits which will constitute a preview of the national aviation exhibits in the 1939 world's fairs.

The Army will exhibit two pursuit planes and the famous stratosphere test flying in which army flyers have reached altitudes of 36,000 feet. It will be the first time this ship has been shown to the public.

Four air transport lines: United,
American, TWA, and Pan American Airways—in cooperation with the Douglas Aircraft Corporation, will exhibit one of the large Douglas sleeper transports which are in transcontinental service.

Various manufacturers will exhibit working demonstrations of such interesting phenomena as the radio beam and other aircraft radio devices, the automatic pilot, motors, propellers and floats which permit conversion of land planes for landing on water. A special cession will be devoted to model aircraft built various juvenile and adult organizations.

As an added attraction, the International will present twice each day "Cavalcade of Flight," a huge musical and dramatic spectacle based on the history of aviation.

The Air Show will bring to Chicago all the leaders of the aviation industry and such famous flyers as Dick Merrill, Jimmie Doolittle,
Frank Hawks, Clyde Pangborn, Al Williams, Eddie Rickenbacker and many others.

Chicago radio stations and the national broadcasting chains are planning extensive special programs during Air Show week.

Deity of Christ

Beyond Challenge

Dr. Walter A. Maier Asserts

The last 19 centuries of history should have ended the debate on Christ, according to Dr. Walter A.
Maier, who asserted Sunday in his coast-to-coast Lutheran Hour broadcast, that the deity of Jesus Christ is based on facts not fiction.

"The one blessed conviction which distinguishes Christianity from every other creed, is the recognition of Jesus Christ as our God of Glory" Dr.
Maier continued. "By accepting or rejecting the truth of the scriptures churches forfeit or retain their scriptural right to existence and preachers prove themselves servants of God or servants of men"

Dr. Maier said that world literature points to a revival of interest in Christ and that more books have been written even in recent decades, in regard to His person and works than about any other figure in history. He declared however, that "The Christ who remains after the erasures of infidelity and after unbelief has blocked out the divine and merciful nature of our Lord, is not the Christ of the new testament but the Christ of the "new criticism."

Appealing for a widespread and intelligent reaffirmation of the deity of Jesus Christ, particularly in those churches and denominations which have discriminated against plain biblical pronouncements, Dr. Maier said, "Only by loyalty to this foundational truth, can the quarter of a million American churches meet the emergencies that loom up on our national horizon. Only in a divine Christ can there be any vital sustaining power."

Lorraine and Ruth Funk who have been staying in Chicago where they are both employed are living at home with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. John C. Funk, for the winter.

"I Saw It in the News Review" is a common expression among those who keep well informed on current events. They know that in the "Weekly News Review," which appears regularly in this paper, they obtain a comprehensive interpretation of world events written by Edward W. Pickard, one of the nation's most widely-known news commentators.

Weekly News Review
deals with the important happenings and their effect upon our country. It is more than news—it is an interpretation of the news, and therefore much more valuable to the person who wants to understand what is going on in the world today.

● Read it carefully from week to week. You will find it interesting and helpful in your discussion of world events with your neighbors and friends.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"Life" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, January 16.

The Golden Text was, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. . . . In Him was life; and the life was the light of men" (John 1:1, 4).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "How excellent is thy loving kindness, O God! therefore the children of men put their trust under the shadow of thy wings. They shall be abundantly satisfied with the fatness of thy house; and thou shalt make them drink of the river of thy pleasures. For with thee is the fountain of life: in thy light shall we see light" (Psalms 36:7-9).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy:
"Because Life is God, Life must be eternal, self-existent. Life is the everlasting I am, the Being who was and is and shall be, whom nothing can erase" (p. 289-90).

What Do You Know About Health?

By FISHER BROWN and NAT FALK

Answers:

1. The medical term for cod-liver oil. Along with Vitamin D milk, it is one of the chief sources of Vitamin D, which is necessary in preventing rickets and supplying "bottled sunshine" during the winter months. By including Vitamin D in a properly balanced diet rich in milk, fresh fruits and vegetables, you will do much toward building good bodily resistance to disease.

2. A form of lung disease, suffered by miners, due to inhaling stonedust. The early symptoms are similar to tuberculosis. Hence miners should have frequent physical examinations to be sure that they are free from it. The elimination of silicosis among miners depends upon good ventilation in the mines, the use of sprays and water to allay dust after blasting, and in some cases the wearing of protective masks by the miners.

3. An English doctor of the 18th century who was a pioneer in the correct use of digitalis, or foxglove. This drug is now used extensively as a heart stimulant and as such is invaluable.

Will Co., Treasurer In Race For Office of State Treasurer

Mr. Wirth's stand on the whole matter, is that if Governor Horner, whom he considers the leader of our Democratic party in Illinois, wishes him to make the run, he will gladly do so, as he has no doubts on the outcome of the election, feeling confident he can win. If he is not chosen by the Governor, he will back the Governor's entire ticket from top to bottom, as he has always admired his administration and the way he conducted the affairs of the State of Illinois.

Mr. Wirth's term of office as County Treasurer of Will County has done much to help the farmers in their assessments of property. As County Treasurer he is Supervisor of all assessments and he has been very fair on assessments thru out Will County. He has cooperated 100 per cent with the farmers of this County. Mr. Wirth has adopted a part-payment plan for taxpayers whereby people who are hard hit can pay so much monthly until their property taxes are paid.

On personal property taxes he has been very fair. He has never forced payment of taxes from any property owner who is not in a position to pay. His part-payment plan has been adopted all thru the State of Illinois as numerous treasurers have this plan in operation enabling the people who have been hard hit by the depression to pay their taxes in monthly installments.

Mr. Wirth has made a remarkable record collecting back taxes. When he took office he was left with $111,000 and up to date he has collected in his three years more than that amount. Mr. Wirth's good work in collecting back taxes has enabled the County to meet all its obligations and has enabled the County's credit to be substantial and he has also played a big part in the payment of Blind and Mother's pensions. He expects to carry on the good work during his last year in office and make a record that the taxpayers will be satisfied with his administration.

Mr. Wirth is rated very highly with farmers and business men and it is often said that he is the best Treasurer Will County ever had. If he does not receive the Governor's support in the nomination for Treasurer he will run for Sheriff of Will County, as he has been asked by farmers and business men to make the run as they feel Mr. Wirth is the type of man who will enforce the laws. He has proven that he has kept every promise he made to the taxpayers when seeking the office of County Treasurer. He promised the taxpayers of Will County, if elected he would disburse his money every 30 days to taxing bodies, which would enable the school teachers, policemen and firemen thru out the County to receive their money every thirty days. He has made it possible thru his disbursement of money every thirty days for the school board of Joliet not to float Tax Anticipation Warrants as they have in the past years to meet their payrolls. This saved the taxpayers considerable money in interest as these warrants bear from four to six per cent interest. He also promised the taxpayers of Will County to adopt the monthly payment of taxes and to keep his office open during the noon hour to give the farmers and business men an opportunity to pay their taxes during the noon hour. He also states that he would be a Treasurer for all Will County, nationalities, religion and politics would not enter into it and he has conducted his office in a manner that has been a credit to everyone in Will County. Mr. Wirth should be elected to any office he seeks as he is the type of man the taxpayers of Will County should have.

Mr. Wirth has the endorsement 100 percent of labor and the Taxpayer's League of Will County, besides the endorsements of other Organizations. It is up to every taxpayer in Will County to see that he is returned to office as they have a vote and should vote for a man that has done something for them. Will County should be proud of Mr. Wirth and support him for whatever office he may seek.

PETER RABBIT FINDS BUMBLE BEE

If you look for Bumble Bee Never, never heedless be
Or, like Peter Rabbit, you
May have cause your search to rue.

IT SEEMED to Peter Rabbit that never had he known Bumble Bee to keep out of sight so long when there were plenty of bright-faced flowers. In fact it seemed to Peter as he thought it over that Bumble always had been one of those people who are forever poking in where they are not wanted. Now when he was wanted he couldn't be found. Peter had run his legs almost off among the brightest flowers on the Green Meadows without once seeing Bumble or even hearing his everlasting hum, though two or three times Bumble had but just left a group of flowers when Peter arrived.

Quite discouraged he sat down to rest and get his breath. By and by along came the Merry Little Breezes of Old Mother West Wind. They were dancing and skipping in the happy way which is always theirs and when they saw Peter they rushed over to him and rumbled his hair and pulled his whiskers.

"What's the matter with our happy-go-lucky Peter?" they cried.

"Nothing very much, only I want to find Bumble Bee and can't," replied Peter, smiling in spite of himself.

"Can't find Bumble!" cried the Merry Little Breezes. "Where have you looked for him, Peter?"

"I've looked among all the brightest flowers on the Green Meadows," replied Peter, "and although he has visited many of them he hasn't stayed long enough for me to catch up with him."

The Merry Little Breezes laughed. "Oh, Peter Rabbit!" they cried, haven't you been neighbor to Bumble Bee long enough to know that you should look for him among the sweetest flowers? He loves to visit the brightest flowers, but it is the sweetest flowers he loves most, and with whom he stays the longest. If you would catch up with him go for the sweetest flowers, Peter."

So once more Peter started on to hunt for Bumble Bee, and this time instead of going by his eyes as before he went by his nose, for you know he was looking for the sweetest instead of the brightest flowers, but just as before he had to keep his eyes wide open for danger and make sure that Reddy Fox and Old Man Coyote were nowhere about and that Redtail the Hawk was not in sight. It was very exciting, but after a little it grew tiresome and Peter was almost tempted to give up hunting for Bumble Bee. But he didn't.

At last as he drew near a little group of flowers he heard something that made him sit up and listen. It was a humming sound. Peter kicked up his heels for joy, for he knew that only one could hum like that and that one was Bumble Bee. Pellmell he scampered right in among the flowers. Bumble wasn't to be seen. Peter knew that he was deep in the heart of one of the flowers and eagerly he began to look into them and I am afraid he was a little rough with them. Now, of course, what Peter should have done was to sit up and wait for Bumble to come out. That would have been the polite thing to do, and it always pays to be polite. But Peter was in too much of a hurry, and so he rushed from flower to flower and at last—well, at last Peter found Bumble. Yes, sir, he found him, and then he wished he hadn't.

You see Bumble is very quick tempered, and when Peter suddenly thrust his wobbly little nose into the flower where Bumble was hard at work extracting honey, Bumble felt that no one else had any business there and promptly thrust a little lance into Peter's nose. My, how Peter squealed and danced.

"Buz-z-z! Serves you right for poking your nose in where it doesn't belong," grumbled Bumble as he prepared to fly away.

KNOW THYSELF

by Dr. George D. Greer

WHAT IS MEANT BY THE TERMS "EXTRAVERT" AND "INTROVERT"?

AN INTROVERT is a person who lives chiefly within himself. He is quiet, withdrawing from social life, prefers to work alone, is imaginative, sensitive, careful about details, and likely to worry over small matters. He day-dreams and lives much in his inner imaginative life which he does not express to other people. An extravert is just the opposite: he lives externally, likes to be with other people, is a good mixer, careless about details but excellent as a promoter and organizer, is a leader, is often "happy-go-lucky," and does not tend to worry. His feelings are not easily hurt, and he prefers activity to seclusiveness. Most people are a mixture of these traits, and are called ambiverts.

MANNERS OF THE MOMENT

By JEAN

© By The Associated Newspapers

THE modern young mother has her troubles, we know. But one of the worst, it seems to us, is how to retain her dignity while in the park with the little darling. Little darlings have a habit of diving head first into ash cans, leaping thoughtlessly over fences, or suddenly taking to the open road. An alert mother, no matter how new her suit is, or how unstable her hat, has to be prepared to do the life saving act at almost any moment.

But to cut the actual physical pursuit of stray young ones down to the minimum, we would suggest that every mother carry a whistle tied on a ribbon around her neck. Two shorts and a long for Johnny. Two longs and a short for Betsy. If you would train the children to respond automatically to the right whistle, it would be easier. Probably with a pocketful of lump sugar this could be done.

For very small youngsters at the crawling stage, a ribbon tied around his wrist and Mom's, with plenty of length, isn't a bad idea. A mother can read a book in comfort, then, knowing that when baby gets too far away a jerk at the wrist will call attention to that fact. Of course, sometimes you get tangled up in the shrubbery that way. And there are children who seem to be able to get into trouble, no matter how little rope you give them. But if yours are like that, you probably gave up reading books long ago, anyhow.

Items of Interest to the Housewife

To Keep Sink White and Shining.—Make a soap jelly by dissolving soap in warm water and adding a few tablespoons of kerosene. Keep this in a glass or wide-mouthed jar.

Orange Cup Cakes.—Two eggs, sour cream, one cup sugar, one and one-half cups flour, one teaspoon salt, one-quarter cup melted butter, one orange. Break two eggs into cup, fill cup with sour cream. Beat with Dover egg beater. Add sugar. Beat well. Add sifted dry ingredients and then melted butter. Use grated rind of one orange for flavoring. Bake in moderate oven for 20 minutes.

Polishing Cloths.—The cotton tops of old stockings make the best possible rags for polishing plate. They are soft and fine, and if kept clean by boiling regularly in a little milk, they will keep your silver beautifully bright.

Stick That Tear.—Place the torn material wrong side up on a flat surface, cover the tear with white of egg, making sure that the torn edges are close together. Place a piece of linen over it and press with a hot iron.

Colorful Rolls.—Some cooks add color to their rolls by putting a daub of jam in a little hole in the center of each just before baking.

Reviving Transfers.—If you wish to repeat a design when doing embroidery, it is not necessary to buy a new transfer once the original one has been ironed off. Mix an equal amount of washing blue and sugar with a little water and, using a fine brush, paint over the design on the used transfer with this mixture and leave to dry. The transfer can then be ironed off again as when new.

To Prevent Scorching Milk.—Before heating milk in a saucepan, rinse the pan with cold water and it will not scorch so easily.

Preserving the Suitcase.—A castor oil massage will add to the appearance and durability of a leather suitcase.

When Cooking Cheese.—In cooking anything with cheese, use a low temperature because intense heat makes cheese tough and stringy.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination may be a warning of some kidney or bladder disturbance. You may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up at night, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel weak, nervous, all played out. In such cases it is better to rely on a medicine that has won country-wide acclaim than on something less favorably known. Use Doan's Pills. A multitude of grateful people recommend Doan's. Ask your neighbor!

MINISTERING TO PHYSICAL NEEDS

LESSON TEXT—Mark 1:29-45.
GOLDEN TEXT—And he healed many that were sick—Mark 1:34.
PRIMARY TOPIC—When Jesus Went to Peter's House.
JUNIOR TOPIC—When Jesus Went to Peter's House.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Helping the Sick.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christianity's Concern for Physical Health.

"The Mystery of Painlessness" is the title of a book published some years ago, in which the author pointed out that instead of bemoaning the physical ailments of man we should thankfully recognize that much of life is without pain. There is point to the suggestion, but one who has reached the years of maturity and who has stood shoulder to shoulder with suffering mankind is very conscious of the never-silent cry of those whose bodies are in need.

Our Lord was tender and solicitous of man. It was to him that the great host of impotent folk—the lame, the halt, the sick, and the blind—came for healing, and they came not in vain. Note, however, that in the midst of his works of mercy he did not forget his real objective, which was to deal with man's sin.

I. Healing (v. 29).
First, we find our Lord tenderly sharing the sorrow of the home of a friend. One can picture the anxious hush that hovered over the home as distressed relatives and friends sought to alleviate the suffering of the one with a fever. They knew the possibility of a serious outcome of the illness. Many of us have gone through that dark valley. All at once there was new hope, and soon there was joy. Jesus had come and had brought healing. Many of us have also had that blessed experience.

Note that the healing was instantaneous and the restoration complete. She arose to serve. This typifies God's healing of the sickness of the soul. If you are saved you are ready to stand up and serve.

Christianity is not a selfish faith, if it follows its Lord. We see in verses 32 to 34 that all the city came to his door with the diseased and demon-possessed, and he healed them all. The account of the kindly and intelligent care of the sick is written large on the pages of the history of the Christian church.

II. Praying (v. 35).
The Son of God sought out a place and a time for prayer communion with his Father. How often we who profess to follow him fail to pray at all. Certainly we need the grace and power that prayer can bring far more than Jesus did. But, we say, we are so busy. So was he. We are tired. So was he.

III. Preaching (vv. 36-39).
Jesus said, "Let us go . . . that I may preach . . . for therefore came I forth." It bears repetition in this age when men magnify the doing of mighty deeds, that while Jesus did many miracles (and not for a moment would we detract from their worth and glory) yet he repeatedly, by word and act, emphasized the importance of preaching.

Foolish though it may seem to the natural man (read I Cor. 1:18-25), preaching the gospel in the power of the Holy Spirit is now, as it has been through the centuries, God's chosen means of turning the world upside down (Acts 17:6). What a pity that churches and pastors are forsaking it for book reviews, dramas, social hours, forums, community centers, and what not! God give us a revival of great, humble, and fearless preaching of the Word!

IV. Cleansing (vv. 40-45).
There is a sense in which the cleansing of the leper was another act of healing, but leprosy is such a striking type of sin that the incident calls for special consideration.

Leprosy is like sin in that it is a destructive malady that pursues its insidious way without revealing its true nature until it is far advanced. It renders a man unclean, loathsome to himself and dangerous to others. At least such it was in the days of our Lord.

Is there no hope for the leper? Yes; Jesus has come. The smitten man cries out, "If thou wilt thou canst make me clean."

So, also, may the sinner be cleansed, for "whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved" (Rom. 10:13). He will not turn the vilest of sinners away.

The Feeling of Power
He knows that power is unborn, and, so perceiving throws himself unhesitatingly upon his thought, instantly rights himself, stands in the erect position, commands his limbs, works miracles; just as a man who stands on his feet is stronger than a man who stands on his head.

Beauty
This is what we want—we want the vision of a calmer and simpler beauty to tranquilize us in the midst of artificial tastes.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart
National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—Some seventeen or eighteen years ago when I was a staff writer for the Associated Press, specializing in finance, I was called upon to write the "lead" or general story about the annual estimates of expenditures sent to congress that day. The late L. C. Probert was my chief. He read my story and ordered me to rewrite the first paragraph, saying: "You ought to stress that total more; make it read something to the effect that 'billion dollar congress has arrived.' Show where these government expenditures are heading."

In Terms of Billions

The circumstance impressed me for some reason. I can recall the incident as vividly as though it were yesterday: "The era of billion dollar congresses appears to be upon us" but it was one of those incidents that was just a good story to a writer. Little did I realize then what it would mean when viewed from the perspective, say, of 1933, for only the other day President Roosevelt submitted the annual estimates, now called the budget, for the next fiscal year. The call was for $6,869,043,000. That was not all. He said there likely would be additional requests for money later and he added a most significant expression or observation that probably we can expect the annual federal budget to run around seven billion dollars in the future.

In truth, where are these government expenses heading? And what do they mean in the lives of present and future citizens and taxpayers? What does it mean in taxation and especially when one considers that besides this list of scheduled expenditures, there is a little matter of thirty-eight billion dollars in national debt? Then, we ought to remember there has been a deficit for nine successive years—nine years during which the government has spent more than it received in income, and there probably will be at least one more.

As the figures were approved by the President and sent to the capitol, the government will spend $539,000,000 (its deficits) more during the fiscal year that starts next July 1 than taxes will bring into the treasury. That means, of course, more borrowing and more borrowing means an increase in the public debt. Onward and upward! Or should we say it in a revised form: upward—and upward!

Most of the newspapers made headlines out of several items because they were huge, immense. Attention was called to the fact that the appropriation for national defense—the army, the navy, the marine corps—was $991,000,000. That was the greatest peacetime total in history. They also referred at length to a billion dollar appropriation for relief, and to an item of $976,000,000 in interest on the public debt, and to $538,000,000 for pensions to veterans of wars.

These are startling in their size. They should occasion comment. Sometimes I think it requires staggering totals to cause people to stop and think a bit. Maybe these will do that. But in any event, the budget just submitted to me seems to carry some additional significance, matters that deserve more thought than the size of those items mentioned. I refer to the general trend as exemplified by the President's remark that we may expect seven billion dollar budgets in the future.

As to that indication, is it not about time to call a halt? Throughout the nearly twelve hundred pages of figures in the budget, as printed, everywhere one can point to new items or expansion of old ones. When I say new items, I refer to expenditures that have come along in the last six or eight years. Scores of them have bobbed up in the last four or five years in the great war on the depression; others have just bobbed up.

I prefer, therefore, to call attention to these scads of little items that, like so many holes in a tank, are allowing public money to flow away without trace or benefit. That is why I think there should be a good deal of attention paid to the general heading in the budget "independent units." Because, tucked away in the list is where the dangers lie.

The total for the independent units of the federal government is in excess of $1,825,000,000. Each of the various agencies therein has its "necessary" expenditures to keep going, and a good many of them, about half a dozen, certainly have their value to the country as a whole. But the new children in that family are growing up. They are funny looking children in some cases. What they will grow out to be, their proud parents surely cannot forecast. Who knows whether they will develop their own clan and become rooted as a permanent drain on the taxpayers. Unless history is changed, quite a number of them will have children of their own in the shape of new bureaus and new duties as the politicians find new ways of spending money.

It is made to appear that we cannot avoid such expenditures as those for national defense, those for veterans who have served their country well, those in payment of interest on a debt that ought not to be so great. There is not much chance, therefore, to effect economy in that direction. Thus, it seems that if the President is sincere about reducing government expenditures and if the politicians in congress have any courage, they had better start looking at the children that are growing up. I mean the children of older government agencies as well as the new children whose parents are politicians.

In this connection, let us advert to that budget mentioned at the opening of this discussion. The Department of Commerce that year was getting something like seven million dollars, as I recall. In this year's budget the appropriation is for $44,710,000.

Now, I assume some one will point out that the functions of the Department of Commerce have expanded immeasurably. That is true. The development of aviation has added many millions to the required expenditure of that government agency. In other words, the federal government has to meet new conditions just like its citizens must meet new conditions. But the point I am trying to make is this: there are enough of those necessary expenditures, outgo that cannot be avoided because they represent real governmental functions, without adding a lot of trick schemes, visionary ideas, theoretical possibilities to the functions of the federal government. There is not space here to list them, but every one of the older agencies has been guilty of biting off new appropriations through the medium of a new child or two or three of its own every few years. I am not suggesting, therefore, that those established agencies, those that have proved necessary, are to be cut out. I am only proposing they be restricted.

I have authority, too, for terming many of these expenditures waste.

Wanton Waste
The authority is the comptroller general of the United States. The comptroller general sent his annual report to congress recently. In it he charged there had been wanton waste of government money by most of the federal agencies. He did not charge dishonesty—just something like weak minds in the way they planned and spent and did not keep books to show exactly what had happened.

The comptroller general, R. N. Elliott, told congress that there was a regular campaign going on among what is usually called the spending agencies of the government to get control of their spending without checkups by the general accounting office. There are continued efforts, he said, "to secure for spending agencies legislation making further surrender by the legislative branch (congress) of its right and authority to direct by law the use of public funds." Of course, Mr. Elliott made no reference to the President's repeated demands of congress for what is called "blank check" appropriations. There were few persons, however, who failed to connect the two. The report singled out the Department of Justice, the War and Navy departments and a whole flock of the independent children as agencies that are getting out of line in keeping track of what they do with their appropriations.

From these facts, it may be apparent to every one that a real need exists for a tight grip by congress on appropriations and an absolute cessation of the great game of starting new agencies.

And here is a story about one teeny, weeny item of government expenditures. It is a story that seems to belie the discussion above about waste by the government agencies. The fact is that the story shows how niggardly the government is in some instances when we all know how wanton waste and recklessness characterize larger spending.

Brig. Gen. Harold C. Reisinger, of the marine corps, is being court-martialed on a charge that he "padded" his personal expense account by $77.35. That is to say the general may be dishonorably discharged after a useful life and perhaps even jailed because the claim is made that he did not spend as much money as his voucher showed. The point of this story, however, does not involve General Reisinger at all. It was by mere coincidence that his trial started as it did during the closing days of the extra session of congress—that session, you will recall, that met November 15 and adjourned December 22 without having passed a single major piece of legislation. The legislation acted on favorably by that session included passage of one appropriation bill. It appropriated $225,000 to be paid to representatives and senators as "mileage."

A Lift Toward Spring

GOOD frocks and true are these currently exhibited by your favorite designers, Sew-Your-Own. There's an ultra-polished model for informal evenings (dancing and that sort of thing), called the "Good-night frock." Then there's the more home-loving "Good-morning" number, and, to complete the trio, a swell little afternoon frock for tea-time goings-on. Why not spend happy days ahead in these very frocks? All you need do, you know, is to Sew, Sew, Sew-Your-Own!

Spring Frock.

The girl who has a flare for streamlining will see at once that the frock at the left is meant for her—just for her. She will make it of satin if she's thinking ahead to Spring; of wool if her mind is on the present or near future. She will puff the sleeves gently, give the girdle tie a fair but firm snug-ging-up, adjust the chic cowl neck—and she'll be something lovely to look at. Yes, Milady, this is the "Good-night frock" and if it's the last thing you do, you must add it to your new wardrobe.

To Start the Day.

When you greet the little family with that bright and cheery "Good morning," be sure your frock reflects an equally sweet note. Sew-Your-Own's most assuring number to this end is pictured above center. With a copy or two in gay gingham or seersucker you'll breeze through your day's work like nobody's business. The shirt-waist styling offers style and comfort that make this your best bet for early season's wear.

A "Go-Gittin'" Style

And for a charming "Good afternoon," choose a frock with plenty on the personality side. Such is the new young model at the right. Buttons in a line down the front tell you in so many dots and dashes that here you have "go-gittin'" style for Spring, 1933. Princess lines cared for fastidiously by a belt, and a collar with much of what it takes—these are things that prompt Sew-Your-Own to put this frock in its Fashion-First Review for the Spring season. Make your version soon, Milady. That invitation to tea will find you unafraid and eager to go.

Tributes Paid To Swedenborg

1688—1772

TRIBUTES to the achievements of Emanuel Swedenborg, the 250th anniversary of whose birth will be commemorated January 23, 1938, will be paid by scholars, scientists and theologians throughout the world. Cited briefly from past comments on his life work are these quotations:

"The truths passing out of his system into general circulation are now met with every day, qualifying the views and creeds of all churches, and men out of the church."—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

"Men no less distinguished by their wisdom than their worldly rank have publicly adopted Swedenborg's beliefs, which are indeed more consolatory than those of any other Christian communion."—Honore De Balzac.

"Swedenborg's message has meant so much to me. It has given color and reality and unity to my thought of the life to come; it has exalted my ideas of love, truth and usefulness; it has been my strongest incitement to overcome limitations. Swedenborg's 'Divine Love and Wisdom' is a fountain of life I am always happy to be near."—Helen Keller.

"As a natural psychologist and theologian he has strong and varied claims on the gratitude and admiration of the professional and philosophical world."—Samuel Taylor Coleridge.

"I have always admired Swedenborg's genius, and I did homage in 1911 at his tomb in the Cathedral at Upsala."—William Lyon Phelps.

"I have the profoundest honor for the character and work of Emanuel Swedenborg. I have from time to time gained much from his writings. It is impossible to say a little on so great a theme."—Phillips Brooks.
